Our rating ★★★★★

The UK's most popular radio station has given its online home a fresh look and some great new features. Content is now organised into categories such as Music, Comedy and Documentaries to make it easier to find and tune into programmes that interest you. The redesigned homepage provides a clearer overview of current and upcoming highlights, and can be customised to display your six favourite shows. The Listen Again function has also been improved, with better integration with BBC iPlayer and playlists provided for each programme. The site's tidy design and simple navigation will mean even DJ Terry Wogan has nothing to grumble about.

Offers.co.uk

Our rating ★★★★★

Voucher-code sites are often criticised for continuing to advertise discounts that are no longer valid. This isn't the case with Offers.co.uk, which prides itself on finding the latest and greatest deals, and then removing them once they're over to make room for more. Savings cover everything from clothing and computing to eating and going out, sourced from an eclectic range of online stores, restaurants and entertainment venues. There are dedicated sections for the newest, most popular and expiring offers, and you can easily share deals with friends by email. This is how discount sites should be done.

Family Gamer

Our rating ★★★★★

As the success of the Nintendo Wii and DS has proved, video games can be fun for all ages. This site has been set up to advise keen kids and puzzled parents about every aspect of gaming, from which console to buy to the best (and worst) titles. Family Gamer offers reviews from people with different perspectives including Dad Gamer, Teen Gamer and Gamer Wife, each of whom has their own profile page, newsletter and blog. The layout of the site resembles a family tree, which makes it easy to browse, but it would be nice to see photos of the people writing the reviews.

Oparla

www.oparla.com

Our rating ★★★★★

Several search engines have launched in the last year, each staking their claim to be the next Google. Oparla is essentially no different to the rest, in that it provides a quick and reliable if unremarkable means of searching the web. If imitation is the most sincere form of flattery, then Oparla opts to flatter – the main interface is nearly all white with a simple search box. Results can be displayed in the classic, Google-like style or in a condensed list, and you can search images and filter them by size. If you register with the site, you can rate search results to give better sites precedence, and get entered into a daily cash draw.

Robinsons Fruit Shoot

Our rating ★★★★★

This innovative website for kids promotes Robinsons Fruit Shoot drinks but offers great prizes too. The homepage features a dazzling array of bright colours and animated icons, which emphasise the fun content inside. The main activity is a set of competitions – children are invited to create their ultimate bedroom or holiday, by dragging and dropping their desired items into place, which they can win as a prize. Creations can be shared on social-networking sites and downloaded as Desktop wallpaper, with the best efforts displayed in a gallery. Fruit Shoot is superbly executed and will definitely keep the kids occupied for a while.
